Beurer ensures a pleasant indoor climate in your own four walls

Ulm, 8 December 2025 – The cold season not only brings frosty temperatures, it often also disrupts the balance of the indoor climate. Some struggle with air that is too dry from heating, irritating the eyes and mucous membranes. Others experience excessive humidity, which encourages mould growth. A balanced indoor climate is therefore crucial – this is where Beurer's products come into play.

For air that is too dry, Beurer's Air Humidifiers LB 200 and LB 300 Plus are the solution. They rely on natural cold evaporation technology to provide powerful and hygienic air humidification. In automatic mode, the devices measure the current humidity and automatically adjust their performance to achieve the desired humidity level.

Beurer air dehumidifiers prevent mould

If the ambient air is too humid, this can not only lead to musty smells and condensation but also promote mould formation. The Air Dehumidifiers LE 150 and LE 250 are the ideal solution: They can prevent these problems by reducing humidity. Particularly practical in the cold season: Both devices feature an integrated laundry drying function with maximum performance for faster drying.

Keep an eye on everything with a thermo hygrometer

To know at all times how the indoor climate is in your own four walls, the Thermo Hygrometers HM 16 and HM 22 offer a precise display of temperature and humidity.

With its range of air humidifiers, air dehumidifiers, and thermo hygrometers, Beurer offers a comprehensive selection for a healthy indoor climate – thus supporting well-being in the cold season.
